Quoting: Anonymous Coward 72675586 But I'll give it to you anyway, just as a consolation prize. Quoting: Anonymous Coward 124916984 But don't worry. I still get to vote for you, and give you that last consolation prize for not voting for me. In response to Asthma: I saw that. I felt like I was watching someone else's brain. I had a similar experience when I was a kid. I had asthma and was constantly under doctor's care and had to have emergency room visits. It felt like watching an episode of ER. From what I remember, it started in my head and traveled out through my body. It was very weird to see how my mind interacted with my body in a way that defied what we see as normal. I felt pretty much the same, I think I think it's the same for everyone, for me I could fall into a serene daze and not even be aware of it. It would start like a storm that lasted for days then fade for days and then fade again and maybe take a year

University of Wyoming's School of Medicine and the Center for Comparative Medicine at the University of California, Davis will establish a pre-doctoral training program in comparative medicine. This program will provide rigorous multidisciplinary training in health sciences research for students from three Departments of Medicine and one Department of Surgery and will have a primary focus on comparative, translational and human disease research. The overall mission of the program is to provide research training in basic medical science, medical-surgical pathophysiology and epidemiology with a focus on comparative medicine. Trainees will be chosen from among the most promising PhD or MD/PhD students in Clinical Medicine who have completed their first two years of medical school and who are committed to a career in academic medicine and research. All trainees will be required to have completed a clinical clerkship in Medicine during the two-year training period, and they will complete a two-year longitudinal curriculum that includes research projects, didactic courses, seminars, journal clubs, scientific conferences and a number of mandatory training courses. As a result of this curriculum, trainees will be capable of performing academic investigative research in comparative medicine, pathophysiology and translational research. A committee of senior faculty members will assign training and promote the trainee's development in a matrix of selected areas of research. The program director, chairman of the Department of Surgery, and president of the Comparative Medicine Institute will assist the program director in overseeing the development of the program. The department and the institution have outstanding research and clinical programs in comparative medicine and pathophysiology and have made significant commitments to research and training in this area. The environment at the University of Wyoming is ideal for this program. It is a resource-rich environment with a strong research program in basic science and comparative medicine and well-established collaborative relationships with academic institutions in the western US and internationally. Pages Friday, April 22, 2010 What is it about relationships? I've known my best friend for almost a decade now. It's been a long time and we've both had our ups and downs but we've always managed to pick ourselves up and dust ourselves off. We've had our share of feisty arguments but these have always been followed by laughter and affection
